But you know what? Making a memo is an efficient way to manage your assignments. You can't only rely on your memory. You need to make a note about what to do and when to do it so that you don't forget. Writing a memo might be annoying at first, but you'll get used to it in no time. With a memo, you can organize your assignments better. Now, we're going to see some good examples of students' memos. Let's look at the screen.

[16~17] 다음을 듣고, 물음에 답하십시오.

W: Hello, students. As you know, sleep is common to all animals, but their sleep patterns vary in many ways. Today, we'll learn what makes animals sleep differently. First, what animals eat can impact their sleep patterns. As grass has much fewer calories than meat, large grass-eating animals sleep only a few hours and spend the majority of their time eating. Elephants sleep only three to four hours a day. Second, temperature affects animals' sleep patterns. High temperatures can cause some animals to overheat. Thus, bats sleep during the day to avoid overheating. Next, another factor is the fear of dangerous meat-eating animals. For protection against these hunters, sheep generally sleep closely together. Finally, the living environment. Flamingos live in shallow waters that contain high amounts of salt. In such a harmful environment, there's no place for them to lie down. This is a reason why flamingos sleep standing up. Now, let's watch a video clip.
